

U.S. Will Be Most Affected by Sanctions on Venezuela

Caracas, March 19 (RHC) --Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro said on Tuesday that the United States government will be the most affected if it decides to impose economic sanctions on the South American country over the recent violent protests that had left 29 dead and over 400 injured.

In a radio and television program "In Contact with Maduro," Maduro said that the Obama administration should evaluate its next steps because it surely would be harmed by these initiatives.

"The oil that they do not buy here we'll sell somewhere else, even at a better price perhaps," he said. During the three-hour program, Maduro called on the Venezuelan opposition to join the National Peace Conference and Dialogue which he has made for the last five weeks since violence broke out in the country.
