

New book says Donald Trump discussed war on Venezuela in 2017

Washington, February 20 (RHC)-- In the United States, a new book by former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe is on the news stands. Entitled "The Threat," the new book reveals that Donald Trump privately discussed going to war with Venezuela in 2017.

McCabe writes: "Then the president talked about Venezuela. That's the country we should be going to war with, he said. They have all that oil and they're right on our back door."

Meanwhile, The Daily Beast is reporting that U.S. State Department officials are considering extending temporary protected status, or TPS, to Venezuelans residing in the United States to protect them from deportation.

TPS holders from Sudan, El Salvador, Haiti, Nicaragua, Honduras and Nepal are currently suing the Trump administration over its attempt to revoke their immigration status.
