Joseph Blatter, president of the International Federation of Association Football (FIFA), said that the stadium meant to host the opening of the World Cup in Brazil will be ready by June 12th.

"The problem of the Sao Paulo's Stadium has been fixed and the opening game of the World between Brazil and Croatia will happen there", Blatter said during the congress of the Union of European Football Association being held in Astana.

Doubts about the stadium arose last November when a crane caused the collapse of part of the roof, killing 2 workers.

As a result, work on the project was set back and a loan of EUR 80.8 million from the National Development Bank was necessary to complete the restoration. According to Blatter, the stadium will be fully completed by April 15th.

The Corinthians Arena will host 6 matches of the World Cup, including a semi-final that will surely mark the height of the stadium's capacity, seating 68,000 fans.
