

Venezuelan delegation in Barbados for dialogue with opposition

Caracas, July 8 (RHC)-- A Venezuelan delegation arrived in Barbados on Monday to continue the peace process through a dialogue with the opposition, which has been supported by the Government of Norway since May. The vice president of Communications, Tourism and Culture, Jorge Rodríguez disclosed on his Twitter account about the arrival of this group to the Caribbean nation to advance negotiations.

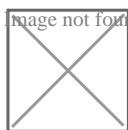

"The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela informs its people and the world that on the morning of Monday, July 8, 2019, the Venezuelan delegation arrived in Barbados to continue with the peace dialogue, sponsored by the Government of the Kingdom of Norway and initiated with the Venezuelan opposition on May 14th this year."

He also points out that the Venezuelan Government has a great desire to overcome political differences, with the purpose of defending its independence and sovereignty in accordance with democratic norms and the constitution.

In recent days, President Nicolás Maduro ratified the Bolivarian Government's willingness to move forward in a process of national agreement among all social, political, economic and cultural sectors of Venezuela.

The Venezuelan State is promoting, with the support of the Government of Norway, peace talks to reach agreements for the benefit of the people. In total, there have been more than 600 calls for dialogue for peace and stability made by President Nicolás Maduro.
