

NYC transit passengers call out dangerously crowded subways and buses

New York, March 31 (RHC)-- In New York City, public transit passengers are calling out dangerously crowded subways and buses, as the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, the MTA, has reduced service in response to a drop in ridership during the coronavirus outbreak.

The MTA announced over the past week that seven employees have died due to complications from COVID-19. Over 300 cases of coronavirus infection have been confirmed among MTA employees.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/218365-nyc-transit-passengers-call-out-dangerously-crowded-subways-and-buses>

Radio Habana Cuba