

Trump to be tested for coronavirus daily after valet tests positive

Washington, May 9 (RHC)-- In the U.S., one of President Donald Trump's personal valets has tested positive for COVID-19. NBC News reports Trump became "lava level mad" at his staff over the incident, accusing them of failing to protect him from the virus. Trump confirmed the valet's positive test during an Oval Office meeting Thursday with Texas Governor Greg Abbott.

Trump said he and Vice President Pence will now be tested for coronavirus once a day. That's not an option for the vast majority of Americans. Over the past week, the United States has carried out, on average, less than a quarter-million diagnostic tests for coronavirus per day. That's far short of the 900,000 tests a day recommended by Harvard's Global Health Institute as the minimum level needed to safely begin reopening parts of the United States. The Harvard plan calls for the U.S. to ramp up to 20 million tests per day by mid-summer.

Radio Habana Cuba