

Editors resign from NYT and Philadelphia Inquirer over recent coverage of protests

Opinion

Tom Cotton: Send In the Troops

The nation must restore order. The military stands ready.

By Tom Cotton

Mr. Cotton, a Republican, is a United States senator from Arkansas.

June 3, 2020

New York, June 9 (RHC)-- In media news, The New York Times editorial page editor James Bennet has resigned following outcry from staff and readers over the publication of an op-ed by Republican Senator Tom Cotton about the protests called "Send in the Troops."

Meanwhile, Stan Wischnowski, the top editor of The Philadelphia Inquirer, has resigned days after the paper published a piece titled "Buildings Matter, Too."

In other journalism news, the board of directors of the Committee to Protect Journalists sent a letter to U.S. governors, mayors and police chiefs, demanding they take immediate action to stop attacks on reporters covering the uprising. The Committee to Protect Journalists says it is investigating at least 280 reports of violence against journalists.

Radio Habana Cuba