

Separatists Reject Putin Call to Delay Secession Referendum

Moscow, May 8 (RHC)-- Russian President Vladimir Putin has called on separatists to delay a referendum on breaking off from Ukraine. Areas in eastern Ukraine occupied by pro-Russian forces are set to vote this Sunday on whether to seek autonomy.

Amid continued violence over the past week, Putin called on the separatists to postpone the vote. He also said that "a necessary condition for the start of this dialogue is the unconditional stopping of any violence." Both the use of military force is absolutely unacceptable in the modern world, as is the use of armed illegal units, extremist elements and forces."

In his comments, Putin also said he has ordered Russian forces to pull back from the Ukrainian border in a bid to defuse tensions.

Earlier today, the coordinating committee of the so-called Donetsk People's Republic rejected Putin's call, saying Sunday's vote will go ahead.
