

WHO says politicization of COVID-19 worsens global health crisis

Geneva, June 23 (RHC)-- Using the coronavirus to score political points has only made the global health crisis worse, the World Health Organization's director-general has claimed, in what some have interpreted as a broadside against Donald Trump.

The politicization of the pandemic has “exacerbated” the effects of the disease, Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said during an online conference on Monday, warning that the virus was still spreading.

We know that the pandemic is much more than a health crisis, it is an economic crisis, a social crisis and in many countries a political crisis. Its effects will be felt for decades to come.

Adhanom Ghebreyesus didn't get into specifics while speaking to the health ministers of the UAE, Sweden, and Norway during the virtual summit, but it appears many took his remarks as a not-so-subtle slight against U.S. President Donald Trump.

Trump announced at the end of May that he would cut ties with the WHO, accusing the organization of doing Beijing's bidding and failing to enact reforms following the outbreak of COVID-19. The U.S. leader claims that China pressured the health agency to mislead the world about the coronavirus after the first outbreak was detected in Wuhan in December.

Washington's decision to pull its funding was condemned by China and even prompted U.S. ally Germany to express concern about the potential “backlash” it would have on international health.

Adhanom Ghebreyesus' comments could mark a widening rift between his organization and the United States. The WHO chief had previously praised Washington's “immense” contribution to global health and called for cooperation despite Trump's move to quit the UN body.

There have been nearly nine million COVID-19 cases registered worldwide since December, resulting in around 468,000 deaths, according to a tally maintained by Johns Hopkins University. Some countries, such as South Korea, have reimposed measures to stop the spread of coronavirus following a second wave in new cases.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/226520-who-says-politicization-of-covid-19-worsens-global-health-crisis>

Radio Habana Cuba