

Report says Trump's "toxic rhetoric" fuels election-related violence

Report says Trump's "toxic rhetoric" fuels election-related violence. (Photo: AP)

Washington, October 30 (RHC)-- The International Crisis Group, which monitors conflict around the world, is warning of possible violence in the United States during voting or the vote-counting process. The group cited growing political polarization, the rise of armed groups and the higher-than-usual chances of a contested election outcome.

But the International Crisis Group says the most important risk factor is the president himself. In a new report, the group writes that President Trump's "toxic rhetoric and willingness to court conflict to advance his personal interests have no precedent in modern U.S. history."

Radio Habana Cuba