

Three key states could determine U.S. presidential elections

Three key states could determine U.S. presidential elections. (Photo: Internet)

Washington, November 3 (RHC)-- The U.S. states of Florida, North Carolina and Ohio could determine the presidential elections in that country, according to the Axios news site.

The website explained that the overall results, in some cases, could be delayed until Friday -- given the high number of ballots sent by mail registered in these elections.

Axios says that officials from the states of Georgia and North Carolina expressed their confidence in being able to have the vote count finished by election night or the next day.

Radio Habana Cuba