

Trump appeal for legal help nets $170 million to fund PAC or his own pockets

New York, December 1 (RHC)-- The New York Times and Washington Post are reporting the Trump campaign has raised as much as $170 million since Election Day by appealing to supporters for help with legal challenges. Much of the money will reportedly go into an account for the president to use on future political activities — or even on himself.

One Trump donor, North Carolina businessman Fredric Eshelman, has sued the campaign to recover his $2.5 million donation, citing “disappointing results.”

Radio Habana Cuba