Google faces third major antitrust challenge

Washington, December 18 (RHC)-- In the U.S., dozens of attorneys general from across 35 states have launched an antitrust lawsuit against Google, accusing the tech giant of anti-competitive actions that protect the company's general search monopolies, depriving consumers of choices. The lawsuit filed Thursday is one of three antitrust cases against Google.

In other news, Google employees are demanding senior leadership reinstate prominent Black researcher Timnit Gebru, who alleged she was fired earlier this month after arguing tech companies should do more to ensure gender-biased and racist language are not exacerbated by artificial intelligence systems.
