

Prisoners in Louisiana penitentiary on hunger strike

New Orleans, February 25 (RHC)-- In the United States, prisoners at the Louisiana State Penitentiary in Angola have gone on hunger strike after they were kept in solitary confinement past the end of their disciplinary sentences.

New Orleans, February 25 (RHC)-- In the United States, prisoners at the Louisiana State Penitentiary in Angola have gone on hunger strike after they were kept in solitary confinement past the end of their disciplinary sentences.

The prisoners are being held in unheated 9-by-6-foot cells with only a jumpsuit and a sheet, despite record low temperatures this month.

They're allowed just one hour of outside access per day. United Nations human rights experts have repeatedly said solitary confinement practices in the United States amount to torture.
