

Georgia prisoners shackled and placed in solitary confinement days after giving birth

Image not found or type unknown

Georgia prisoners shackled and placed in solitary confinement days after giving birth

Atlanta, April 14 (RHC)-- In the U.S., the Southern Center for Human Rights is demanding better treatment and conditions for people incarcerated at the Lee Arrendale State Prison in Georgia, where advocates say women who have just given birth are being shackled or placed in solitary confinement in violation of state and federal law.

In a letter to the prison's warden, the group says that women prisoners have described being placed in solitary within days of giving birth, sometimes without being able to change out of the bloodied clothing they wore during childbirth.

The group also warns of using solitary confinement to detain people who've contracted COVID-19 — who are often held in filthy cells with malfunctioning plumbing, insufficient water and personal hygiene products.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/254013-georgia-prisoners-shackled-and-placed-in-solitary-confinement-days-after-giving-birth>

Radio Habana Cuba