San Antonio de los Baños, July 12 (RHC) “ I saw Fidel in Diaz-Canel. Commander in Chief would have done the same”.

This is what Cristina Lorenzo said when he saw President Diaz-Canel walking down the streets of San Antonio de los Baños, where just a few moments before a group of counterrevolutionaries was inciting disobedience.

In his dialogue with the crowd that greeted and accompanied him during his visit to the municipality of the Artemisa province, Diaz-Canel denounced the Cuban-American mob which takes advantage of the situation the country is living in to promote such events.

Members of the Federation of Cuban Women, of the Committees for the Defense of the Revolution, of the Association of Combatants of the Revolution, and young people like Joan Perez said the streets belong to the revolutionaries, not to the mercenaries.

They understand that Cuba lives a complex reality, but they also know that the country will overcome the current adversities like on previous occasions.
