

Lummi Nation Totem Pole arrives in Washington, DC after cross-country journey

Image not found or type unknown

A 25-foot totem pole from the Lummi Nation arrived in Washington, D.C. after a more than 20,000-mile cross-country journey through sacred lands.

Washington, July 31 (RHC)-- In the United States, a 25-foot totem pole from the Lummi Nation arrived in Washington, D.C. after a more than 20,000-mile cross-country journey through sacred lands.

U.S. Interior Secretary Deb Haaland and tribal leaders blessed the pole Thursday during a ceremony on the National Mall. It was carved from a 400-year-old red cedar tree, and will serve to raise awareness of Native issues and protecting sacred sites.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/265667-lummi-nation-totem-pole-arrives-in-washington-dc-after-cross-country-journey>

Radio Habana Cuba