

Biden pledges more vaccine donations but critics say it's not enough

Image not found or type unknown

Biden says U.S. will donate an additional 500 million Pfizer vaccine doses to other nations... but it is not enough

New York, September 23 (RHC)-- U.S. President Joe Biden says the United States will donate an additional 500 million Pfizer vaccine doses to other nations around the world. Biden made the pledge during a virtual global vaccine summit of world leaders.

Biden called on wealthy nations to vaccinate 70% of the world's 8 billion people within the next year. Critics say Biden's commitments fall far short of what's needed.

The vaccine summit's goals make no mention of a push, led by India and South Africa, to waive intellectual property rights on vaccines and to force pharmaceutical companies to transfer technology to vaccine makers in the Global South.

In a statement, the director of Public Citizen's Access to Medicines Program said: "Ending the pandemic is a choice. Leaders at today's summit have yet to make that choice. The White House still has not mobilized all its resources to expand vaccine manufacturing and protect millions more lives that may be lost."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/271338-biden-pledges-more-vaccine-donations-but-critics-say-its-not-enough>

Radio Habana Cuba