

Police raid Glasgow squat housing climate activists protesting COP26

In Glasgow, police reportedly used a battering ram to break into a disused former homeless shelter that had been converted into a temporary squat for climate activists.

Glasgow, November 10 (RHC)-- In Glasgow, police reportedly used a battering ram to break into a disused former homeless shelter that had been converted into a temporary squat for climate activists.

Witnesses described Metropolitan police and Welsh forces going from room to room with batons drawn. The officers' conduct reportedly shocked Scottish police who arrived on the scene soon after the raid.

Protest organizers say they've since reopened the space for the housing of activists.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/276628-police-raid-glasgow-squat-housing-climate-activists-protesting-cop26>

Radio Habana Cuba