

Fukushima nuclear disaster survivors sue over cancer diagnoses

Image not found or type unknown

In Japan, six people who developed thyroid cancer in the aftermath of the 2011 Fukushima nuclear meltdown have filed a landmark lawsuit against the Tokyo Electric Power Company.

Tokyo, January 30 (RHC)-- In Japan, six people who developed thyroid cancer in the aftermath of the 2011 Fukushima nuclear meltdown have filed a landmark lawsuit against the Tokyo Electric Power Company.

The plaintiffs were aged from 6 to 16 at the time of the devastating earthquake and tsunami, which triggered one of the world's worst nuclear disasters. A court acquitted former executives from the utility company in 2019.

Meanwhile, a plan to release wastewater from the Fukushima plant starting next year has sparked international condemnation.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/284486-fukushima-nuclear-disaster-survivors-sue-over-cancer-diagnoses>

Radio Habana Cuba