

Summit of the Americas: Belize calls exclusions inexcusable

Image not found or type unknown

?

Los Angeles, June 10 (RHC)-- The Prime Minister of Belize and current president of CARICOM, John Briceño, has described as "incomprehensible and unforgivable" Washington's decision not to invite Venezuela and Cuba to the IX Summit of the Americas.

In his speech during the first plenary session and in front of U.S. President Joe Biden, Briceño said: "This summit belongs to all the Americas."

"It is incomprehensible that we isolate countries of the Americas that have provided strong leadership and have contributed in the hemisphere on critical issues of our times," he stressed. He further emphasized that "Cuba has provided constant cooperation in health to two-thirds of the countries in this hemisphere, including Belize."

"The illegal blockade against Cuba is an affront against humanity. The time has come, Mr. President, to lift the blockade" -- directly addressing Biden, standing a few meters away.

As for Venezuela, the Belizean prime minister said that the country "has done much for energy security in the Caribbean region," and its absence from the summit is "unforgivable."

"The Summit of the Americas should have been inclusive. Geography and not politics define the Americas," he asserted in his speech on Thursday.

The countries of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), currently led by Briceño, hesitated until the last moment whether to boycott the summit in protest of the absences of Cuba and Venezuela.

Finally, some countries such as Belize, Jamaica, Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago, Suriname and Guyana decided to attend, while other CARICOM members are not participating.

In his speech, Briceño urged a commitment to "build the Americas with social justice" and said that "a turning point" had been reached on many issues.

Among them, he cited the vulnerability of Caribbean countries to climate change, debt crises and vaccination against COVID-19.

The Prime Minister of Belize called for the IX Summit of the Americas, which runs until Friday in Los Angeles, to have positive results: "With firm commitments, we can move forward."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/nacionales/290329-summit-of-the-americas-belize-calls-exclusions-inexcusable>

Radio Habana Cuba