Kuwait City, June 14 (RHC)-- Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro arrived this Monday in Kuwait to fulfill a work agenda and strengthen relations between both nations.

"We arrived in the State of Kuwait, in the framework of our International Work Agenda," Maduro indicated through his Twitter account.

This is the fourth country visited by Maduro in the framework of the international tour that began last June 7th.

The first country to visit was Turkey, where he met on June 8 with his counterpart Recep Tayyip Erdogan and signed three new agreements in the areas of tourism, agriculture and financial-monetary matters.

Later, on Thursday, June 9th, he was in Algeria where, together with his counterpart Abdelmadjid Tebboune, they agreed to build a robust economic agenda and relaunch the high-level mixed commission, which will be in charge of drawing up a standard work map.

The third country to visit was Iran, where he held a meeting on Saturday with President Ebrahim Raisi and signed a cooperation agreement for the next 20 years. Maduro also announced that the first direct flight from his country to Iran would depart on July 18th.
