London, July 14 (RHC)-- The BBC reports that British commandos deployed to Afghanistan killed at least 54 Afghans under suspicious circumstances during a six-month tour of Helmand province starting in late 2010.

The investigation found a pattern in which unarmed people were routinely shot dead, with weapons later planted on them to justify the crimes.

The BBC also documented bullet holes at several homes that suggested execution-style killings rather than firefights. In response, the U.K. Ministry of Defense accused the BBC of "irresponsible, incorrect" journalism.
