

Mass grave with remains of 8,000 Nazi war victims found in Poland

Image not found or type unknown

A symbolic grave in the Bialucki Forest near Ilowo, Poland, on July 13, 2022, the site of a mass grave of some 8,000 victims of German Nazis during World War II [Janek Skarzynski/AFP]

Warsaw, July 15 (RHC)-- A mass grave containing human ashes equivalent to 8,000 people has been discovered near a former Nazi concentration camp in Poland, the country's Institute of National Remembrance said.

The institute, which investigates crimes committed during the Nazi occupation of Poland and the communist era, said on Wednesday that the remains were unearthed near the Soldau concentration camp, now known as Dzialdowo, north of Warsaw.

“It’s the evidence of how thoroughly the Germans tried to obliterate the traces of genocide they committed in Eastern Europe,” the Institute said in a statement.

Nazi Germany built the camp when it occupied Poland during World War II, using it as a place of transit, internment and extermination for Jews, political opponents and members of the Polish political elite.

Estimates have put the number of prisoners killed at Soldau at 30,000, but the true toll has never been established. The grim discovery of approximately 15.8 tonnes (15,800kg) of human ashes means it can be claimed that at least 8,000 people died there, according to investigator Tomasz Jankowski. The estimate is based on the weight of the remains, with 2kg (4.4lb) roughly corresponding to one body.

The victims buried in the mass grave “were probably assassinated around 1939 and mostly belonged to the Polish elites”, Jankowski said. In 1944, the Nazi authorities ordered Jewish prisoners to dig up the bodies and burn them to wipe out evidence of war crimes.

Andrzej Ossowski, a genetics researcher at the Pomeranian Medical University, told the AFP news agency that samples from the ashes had been taken and would be studied in a laboratory.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/293530-mass-grave-with-remains-of-8000-nazi-war-victims-found-in-poland>

Radio Habana Cuba