Caracas, December 5 (RHC)-- The president of Venezuela, Nicolás Maduro, highlighted this Sunday the recovery of the country, which -he affirmed- now lives in peace and has a promising future. In a message posted on his Twitter social network account, the Venezuelan ruler wrote: "We are recovering the Homeland with work, effort and deep love for our People."

"Today we live in peace, joyful and with a promising future for everyone, Happy Sunday," said the head of state.

Last November 26, the Government of President Maduro and a sector of the opposition grouped in the so-called Unitary Platform (PU) subscribed a second partial agreement, for the social protection of the people.

According to media reports, this agreement is aimed at recovering schools, the health system and services, particularly the electricity system, in connection with the recovery of more than US$ 3 billion belonging to the Venezuelan State and seized by the United States and its allies in several countries.

President Maduro has highlighted on several occasions the constant growth of the national economy, thanks to the joint work with industry and the private sector, and the support to entrepreneurship. The South American country has experienced a sustained economic growth of 10 percent, despite the COVID-19 pandemic and the unilateral coercive measures maintained by the U.S. Government.
