

Doctors Without Borders considers suspending Haiti operations amid gang violence

Image not found or type unknown

Port-au-Prince, March 9 (RHC)-- In Haiti, the humanitarian aid group Doctors Without Borders is considering suspending its operations after a series of shootouts at its clinics in Port-au-Prince and other violent incidents as the island nation is increasingly controlled by gangs.

Local residents are also facing deepening food insecurity and hunger, while medicine and other resources are extremely hard to access due to the turmoil. Human rights advocates have documented severe abuses, including sexual violence and hundreds of killings.

A new report by the United Nations says weapons are being smuggled from the United States and ending up in the streets of Haiti. Fighting between gangs has also intensified over the control of territory, forcing families to flee their homes.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/316152-doctors-without-borders-considers-suspending-haiti-operations-amid-gang-violence>

Radio Habana Cuba