First International Congress of Comparative Law sessions in Cuba

Havana, April 5 (RHC) The second day of the First International Congress of Comparative and Constitutional Law will meet today at the National Hotel in Havana.

Organized by the Faculty of Law of the University of Havana, the event seeks the exchange of knowledge and experiences of academics, researchers and other legal professionals from different latitudes.

Through presentations, communications and posters, various issues under debate in current constitutionalism will be developed, according to the information published on the event's website. The congress is also an ideal space to generate collaborative projects between institutions and participants.

The event, which began the day before and ends tomorrow, is sponsored by various academic and research centers in Italy, Mexico and Cuba.
