

Arrival of skilled Russians helps economy, according to Serbian Prime Minister

Arrival of skilled Russians helps economy, according to Serbian Prime Minister

Havana, April 21 (RHC) - The influx of highly-skilled Russians is helping Serbia's economy, Prime Minister Ana Brnabic said this Friday at the Bloomberg New Economy Gateway Europe conference.

According to the head of government, many young and talented engineers come to her country to help develop the technology field and receive benefits from Belgrade. Brnabic noted that in other countries, Russian specialists may not feel welcome, but that is not the case in her country. The president also recalled Serbia's rejection of sanctions against the Russian Federation.

Recently, Serbian President Aleksandar Vučić indicated that Western officials insist on offering the Balkan nation to become a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and talk about the alleged Russian threat, but in fact, the military bloc represents the biggest challenge to the Serbia's safety. (Source: Prensa Latina)

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/320394-arrival-of-skilled-russians-helps-economy-according-to-serbian-prime-minister>

Radio Habana Cuba