

Climate protesters disrupt Wimbledon Tennis Matches, shut down Welsh coal mine

Image not found or type unknown

Climate protesters disrupted play at the Wimbledon tennis tournament twice on Wednesday, throwing orange confetti on the court

London, July 7 (RHC)-- In the United Kingdom, members of the climate action group Extinction Rebellion have shut down operations at the nation's largest coal mine in a nonviolent civil disobedience action. The open-pit mine in South Wales had been operating without a license.

Elsewhere in the U.K., climate protesters disrupted play at the Wimbledon tennis tournament twice on Wednesday, throwing orange confetti on the court and displaying T-shirts reading “Just Stop Oil.”

On Thursday, youth climate activists disrupted a speech by U.K. Labour Party leader Keir Starmer, accusing him of U-turning on his pledge to fund a transition away from fossil fuels.

In Sweden, Greta Thunberg and other youth climate activists have been charged with “disobeying the police” for peacefully blocking oil tankers at a port in Malmö last month. If convicted, the protesters face fines and up to six months in prison.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/327764-climate-protesters-disrupt-wimbledon-tennis-matches-shut-down-welsh-coal-mine>

Radio Habana Cuba