Havana, July 7 (RHC)-- The First Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Cuba and president of the Republic, Miguel Díaz-Canel held a dialogue this Friday with young people from the telecommunications sector at Havana's Technological Science Park, located at the University of Informatics Sciences.

The dignitary recognized the progress in the implementation of the Transfermóvil system, born eight years ago and which has more than four million customers in the Caribbean nation, detailed on Twitter the Presidency of the Republic.

"It has been a boost for the use of e-commerce," stressed the head of state.

The Havana Scientific and Technological Park provides its clients with access to highly specialized human talent and the possibility of remunerating them according to results, while offering state-of-the-art real estate infrastructure.

Since its creation in 2020, it has managed to establish alliances with other national and international organizations such as the Association of Science and Technology Parks of Spain and the International Association of Science Parks and Areas of Innovation.

For its business management model, it designs a plan for the evolution of projects, which results in the viability of the product to be developed and its subsequent commercialization.
