

Marine biologists warn ocean heat threatens mass die-off of Caribbean coral reefs

In the Caribbean, marine biologists are warning that unprecedented ocean heat is further stressing a coral reef system that's already on the brink of collapse.

Miami, July 15 (RHC)-- In the Caribbean, marine biologists are warning that unprecedented ocean heat is further stressing a coral reef system that's already on the brink of collapse.

This week, the Farmers Insurance company said it would no longer cover properties in Florida, citing increasingly frequent extreme weather and flooding events caused by the climate crisis.
