Football

London's Wembley Stadium will host the final and semi-finals of the 2020 European football championship, which will exceptionally be held in 13 different countries, U E F A boss Michel Platini announced Friday. The quarter-finals will meanwhile be hosted by Munich (Germany), Baku (Azerbaijan), Saint Petersburg (Russia) and Rome (Italy), the president of European football's governing body revealed at a ceremony in Geneva, Switzerland.

For the 60th anniversary of the European Championship, first held in 1960, U E F A decided to organize the tournament across the whole continent.

On top of one quarter-final, Rome, Munich, Baku and St Petersburg will each host three group stage games. Only hosts that had stadiums with a capacity of 60 thousand were considered.

Many other European countries will host games and sports events. Stadiums like Budapest and Baku for the Euro 2020 are still waiting to be built.

For this jubilee tournament, U E F A said it wanted a "Euro for Europe." In the past, a single country or at the most two, like Austria and Switzerland in 2008, or Poland and Ukraine in 2012,,,,,,hosted the finals.

The experiment, which was Platini's brainchild, will be a one-off event however, with the 2024 tournament to be hosted again by a single country.
