

New York police probe chemical attack targeting pro-Palestinian students at Columbia University

New York, January 24 (RHC)-- The New York Police Department has launched an investigation after pro-Palestinian students at Columbia University were sprayed last week with a hazardous, foul-smelling chemical during a protest on campus. Eight students were hospitalized.

The group Students for Justice in Palestine has alleged the chemical attack was carried out by two students who are former members of the Israeli military. No arrests have been made yet.
