

Doomsday Clock remains at 90 seconds before midnight

Image not found or type unknown

New York, January 25 (RHC)-- The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists is warning the world remains as close to global annihilation as ever before. The Bulletin has announced its Doomsday Clock remains at 90 seconds before midnight, where it was first set for the first time last year.

Princeton University professor Alex Glaser said: "When we set the clock last year, there were major concerns that nuclear weapons could be used in Ukraine. And today's clock setting was still overshadowed by the war in Ukraine, but also the war in Gaza, which has caused enormous human suffering and could lead to a broader conflict in the region involving several nuclear weapon states and regional powers.”

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/345400-doomsday-clock-remains-at-90-seconds-before-midnight>

Radio Habana Cuba