

Bolivia warns of right-wing interference in Venezuelan elections

La Paz, March 31 (RHC)-- The Bolivian Ministry of Foreign Affairs has reported that Venezuela is preparing to celebrate upcoming elections in an atmosphere of victory, while warning about the actions of extreme right-wing organizations.

"We express our concern for the threats and actions of some extreme right-wing organizations that, instead of joining the electoral competition as other opposition organizations decided to do, are in line to destabilize the elections and the Venezuelan political system," the statement said.

They also stated that the United States should respect the Venezuelan process and not interfere in its internal affairs.

The United States must respect Venezuela's self-determination "to continue advancing along the path towards its definitive independence and abandon its interferenceist and interventionist plans," the official document insists.

Bolivia issued "a Latin American and revolutionary greeting to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, to its people and to brother President Nicolás Maduro."

A number of other organizations and countries have expressed their support to the democratic process of the Venezuelan elections. On its part, the Union of Journalism and Communication Workers of Peru (Sutpecos) referred that "the forms, their particularities and peculiarities are proper of Venezuelans, the only ones called to resolve, especially if no electoral force is prevented from the participatory exercise, be it from the center, the left or the political right."
