

Italian university suspends Erasmus agreements with Israeli universities

Rome, June 5 (RHC)-- The University of Palermo in Italy has suspended its Erasmus exchange agreements with several Israeli universities, citing safety concerns.

A university statement blamed the “lack of essential security guarantees to which those involved in the cooperation partnerships would be exposed in this particular and delicate moment of international crisis.”

The Italian university also said that it was looking into research relations and creating “ad hoc regulation on dual use [technology], which should be finalized by the summer break.”

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/356535-italian-university-suspends-erasmus-agreements-with-israeli-universities>

Radio Habana Cuba