Beirut, July 31 (RHC)-- A large explosion ripped through a southern suburb in Lebanon's capital, Beirut, as the Israeli military carried out a targeted strike against a senior Hezbollah commander, who survived the attack.

Lebanon's official National News Agency (NNA) reported the attack was conducted by a drone that fired three missiles. It said the strike had targeted the area around Hezbollah's Shoura Council in the Haret Hreik neighborhood of Beirut.

In a statement, the Israeli military said it had targeted a Hezbollah commander the regime claimed was responsible for last week's rocket attack on the occupied Golan Heights. The regime claims Lebanon's Hezbollah fighters were behind the rocket strike in Golan, which left a dozen people dead. Hezbollah strongly denies any involvement.

Media reports said that the assassination attempt against Fuad Shukr was a failure. He is the highest military figure in Hezbollah and a longtime advisor to the group's leader Hassan Nasrallah. A correspondent for Israel's Channel 13 said Israeli officials were not optimistic about the success of the assassination attempt in Beirut.

Security sources said at least two people were killed in the Israeli attack and 10 others wounded.

The Iranian Embassy in Lebanon condemned the Israeli aggression against Beirut. "We condemn in the strongest terms the cowardly and sinful Israeli aggression that targeted the southern suburb of Beirut, which claimed the lives of a number of martyrs and wounded," the embassy said in a post on X.

An official in Lebanon's Amal Movement said the targeted building is inhabited by Lebanese citizens. "What happened today changes the equations dramatically, as it is a targeting in the depths of the suburb."

The airstrike was the first in a suburb of Beirut since January, when an Israeli drone attack assassinated senior Hamas official Saleh al-Arouri. Hezbollah responded to that act of aggression with massive strikes on Israeli military sites, targeting the Israeli military's sensitive Mount Meron air traffic control base for the first time.

Before Tuesday's strike, a Hezbollah official said the group rejected calls from international envoys to avoid responding to an Israeli attack. Hezbollah informed mediators it would still respond to any Israeli attack, the official told reporters.

"International envoys are indirectly raising with us the idea that we should not respond to the expected aggression under the pretext of the need to avoid escalation and sliding towards a comprehensive war," the Hezbollah official was quoted by Reuters.

Hezbollah had "informed them of our explicit rejection of this request" and would respond, the official said. Hezbollah has long said it is prepared for any scenario should Israel deepen the war beyond the border area of southern Lebanon.

The two sides have been exchanging fire on an almost daily basis since early October when the Israeli regime launched the ongoing devastating war on Gaza.

Hezbollah has stated that it will halt its rocket and missile attacks on Israeli targets if the war in Gaza comes to an end.
