Caracas, August 21 (RHC)-- The president of Venezuela, Nicolás Maduro Moros, stated on his program "Con Maduro +", that "things are on track and peace is triumphant" in reference to the way in which the people resume the daily tasks of economic growth and development in a climate of peace and harmony, despite the violence that the extreme right caused in the country after the elections of June 28.

While hatred is receding in the face of a reality in which “love is advancing and Venezuelans continue to integrate, thinking about the future,” the head of State stressed that the political mobilization articulated by popular sectors on Saturday, August 17 was impressive and forceful, in contrast to the meager concentration that the oligarchy “of the surnames” added.

“Those who dream big and work perseveringly, only have one destiny: victory; and victory belongs to us,” he said. He assured that since the time of former deputy Juan Guaidó, the South American nation had not known such a great failure in the street as the one suffered during that day by the Venezuelan right, which tried to articulate an international front of hatred and threats against the Bolivarian Revolution.

The Venezuelan opposition, not the extreme right, does not want fascism or violence; they want to work, for economic prosperity to continue to arrive, stressed the dignitary.

The head of State regretted that the Venezuelan opposition no longer has “political parties, political leaders, political doctrine, ideology” or “programmatic proposal.” “Now it is a few influencers from Miami pouring out hate,” illustrated the Venezuelan president.

When urging to stop hating, Nicolás Maduro stressed that “those who do not like me, I respect them, and for those who promote hate, there is zero tolerance for fascism, violence and aggression against people. “Do not love me, but love Venezuela,” he said.

He said that the war of the bots is to fill the mind with hate. It is a fascist campaign, insisted Nicolás Maduro, while pointing out that the multimillionaires, the new owners of the technological empire, the new oligarchy believe they can take power.

“Elon Musk is preparing to reach the White House and impose his fascist vision,” said the Venezuelan president, but “that is not going to happen,” he stressed.

The independence of the 21st century, in Venezuela, is economic, scientific, technological,” stressed the head of State, who recalled that the people have never hesitated in the face of the brutal attacks against them.

He recognized the support of popular organizations that mobilized within the country and in other nations in defense of the sovereignty of the people of Venezuela. He stressed that these “accompany the effort for peace.”

Among other issues, Maduro Moros called on the people to participate in the second national consultation, which will take place on August 25, and to decide through the mobilization of the more than 49,000 communal councils and communes and the ballot boxes the financing of the projects that prioritize the communities.
