Iranian media reported this Saturday that the capital and several provinces of the country are in complete normality after the Israeli attacks.

According to official sources, despite the reported explosions and the rumors generated about them, the situation in Tehran remains normal and under control.

Iran's Air Defense confirmed in the early hours of Saturday the Israeli attacks against positions in the provinces of Tehran, Khuzestan and Ilam, stating that they have caused limited damage.

Israel launches new threat to Iran

After announcing the end of the attacks against alleged Iranian military positions, Israeli Army spokesman Daniel Hagari warned that his country will respond to any Iranian intention to increase tensions in the Middle East.

"If Iran were to make the mistake of starting a new round of escalation, we would be forced to respond," said Daniel Hagari when announcing the end of the Israeli attack.

On October 1, Iran launched around 180 missiles against Israel in response to the assassination of Hezbollah leader Hassan Nasrallah in Beirut and the leader of the Palestinian resistance movement Hamas, Ismael Haniyeh, in Tehran in July.
