

Two-Mile-Long Oil Slick Appears Off Coast of California

San Francisco, July 30 (RHC)-- In the U.S. state of California, authorities are investigating a two-mile-long oil slick that has appeared in the water off the coast of Santa Barbara.

Two kayakers discovered the slick Wednesday when they suddenly found their legs and boats covered in oil. The slick appeared about 12 miles away from the site of a massive pipeline spill in May, which dumped 100,000 gallons of crude oil onto the beach.
