

Hillary Clinton's Support Falls 21 Points Since July as Trump Gains

Washington, September 16 (RHC)-- U.S. presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, who is running for the Democratic nomination, has lost 21 percentage points in support over the past two months, a new poll has revealed.

The latest national ABC News/Washington Post poll also showed that support for Hillary Clinton's Republican rival, Donald Trump, has, however, surged to 33 percent, which is a 9-point jump since July.

The poll has also indicated that GOP presidential hopeful Ben Carson, a retired neurosurgeon, also made gains during the same period as support for traditional politicians continues to decline.

Some two-thirds of the Republicans who say they are looking for non-political experience currently support either Trump or Carson, the two non-politicians.

Clinton still leads the Democratic field, but for the first time her support has fallen below 50 percent in ABC/Post polls. Forty-two percent Democratic and pro-Democratic voters backed the former secretary of state, but it's a drop of 21 points since the last poll in July.
