Football

Everything went splendidly for the United States in its Olympic qualifying match against Cuba on Saturday until the final minutes, when Marc Pelosi went down in a collision and clutched his shin. For a moment, coach Andi Herzog feared the talented midfielder had broken his leg again.

It turned out the budding Earthquakes star merely sustained a deep gash, one that should not keep him out too long. Good thing for the Americans, whose 6-1 victory over Cuba in Kansas City, Kansas, guaranteed them a place in the CONCACAF semifinals.

Pelosi, who missed more than a year after breaking his leg in 2013, said: "I was really worried something happened again. It hurts, but it's not bad."

The Americans play their final group stage match against Panama, which lost 3-1 to Canada, on Tuesday night in Colorado while Cuba faces Canada in the other doubleheader match.

The top 2 teams from each group advance to the semifinals, and the 2 finalists qualify for the 2016 Rio Games. The winner of the 3rd-place faces Colombia in a one-game playoff for another berth.
