

Saudi Warplanes Hit Several Areas in Yemen

Sanaa, October 20 (RHC)-- Saudi fighter jets have conducted a fresh round of attacks against several areas across Yemen. On Tuesday morning, Saudi fighter jets struck a commercial neighborhood of al-Rahidah district in Yemen's southwestern province of Ta'izz, though no reports of casualties were available.

Saudi warplanes also launched two aerial attacks on the Selo district of the same province, Yemen's Arabic-language al-Masirah satellite television network reported.

Early on Tuesday, Saudi jets launched airstrikes against a residential area in the Razeh district of Yemen's mountainous northwestern province of Sa'ada, leaving two civilians dead.

Separately, Saudi aircraft carried out aerial assaults on the city of Sirwah, which lies about 120 kilometers east of the capital, on Monday evening. There were no immediate reports of possible casualties and the extent of damage caused.

Saudi jets also bombarded the international airport in the southwestern Yemeni city of Ta'izz, situated 346 kilometers (214 miles) south of Sana'a, on Monday. No casualties were reported.

In addition, Saudi warplanes reportedly dropped at least 10 cluster bombs on the Haydan district of Sa'ada Province, on Monday.
