Although I started with low marks because of psychological problems, I feel very happy thanks to the support of my people, family and technical group who helped to achieve the Pan-American gold with new record and then the gold lid... and I'm also happy because despite all the difficulties we deal with we have achieved our results and made known to the world that Cuba still has leading pole vaulters despite the perennial situation and there are very good athletes; thus, you can achieve everything you want, which is an example for many countries and children, plus I feel extremely happy for being selected the Best Athlete of the Year. Now, I am training a lot for indoors competitions next March where I hope to keep my crown.

Curiosity

The Austrian cyclist Jacob Zurl wants to have a non-stop tour throughout Cuba from December 15th-17th, said Ottawa's Canadian Cycling magazine.

Zurl, a specialist in resistance, who shows some other difficult challenges in his record, will try to become the 1st rider to continuously devour the 1400 km. from one end of Cuba to the other.

"...No one has so far lived such a challenge facing the high Cuban heat and humidity. I think my love for cycling resistance and unexplored routes, plus the support of my team and my family, will help me meet it," he said.

Before leaving, the rider will spend a week getting accustomed to the difficult and potentially oppressive Caribbean climate, while tasting the local food options to see which ones would be most useful for his trip.

In fact, for several weeks Zurl has been practicing for tolerance to high temperatures and humidity he'll deal with across Cuba.

In 2014, Zurl made record time across the Himalayas, a distance of over 530 km., in 38 h. 40 min., plus a Guinness record for the Most Vertical Meters pedaled in 48 hours when he covered 28,789 meters of Austrian territory from April 20th-22nd in 2012.

Social Impact of Sports Expatriation Highlighted in Event in Cuba

A total of 683 Brazilian soccer players returned to their homeland, out of 1,029, who signed contracts with foreign clubs in the last 2 years, almost 66% of the total.

The data was supplied by outstanding Brazilian psychologist Regina Brandao, from the San Judas Tadeus University, in a paper offered at the 6th International Convention for Physical Activity and Sports (AFIDE), held at the Havana Convention Center, in the Cuban capital, which concluded last Thursday.

The phenomenon of pro athletes signed by foreign clubs has a great social impact, because it demands a high multi-dimensional adaptation to go over the barriers of each situation, said the famous university professor and psychologist.

The paper presented by the Brazilian professor, is the result of an investigation carried out on 23 members of the Brazilian national soccer team, and shows how what it seems to be as "a perfect world" is just "a complex reality, sometimes frustrating."

The final considerations of her paper propose an inter-cultural and didactic training with the soccer player on general and specific culture of the country where he will play; instruction on the language, a strong social support of the host team, as well as to show them the basic daily aspects, where to go shopping, places to consume food, places to walk with the family, among others.

Brandao concluded: "The more distant, in belief terms, values and language... the more and bigger negative implications we will have to face."
