

U.S. Workers Take to Streets the Second Week of Strike

New York, April 19 (RHC)-- Tens of thousands of workers of the U.S. communications giant, Verizon, have gone on strike again over low wages and job insecurity. Some 40,000 Verizon Communications Inc workers across the East Coast walked off their jobs and took to the streets amid a contract dispute.

The striking workers chanted, whistled, and used noisemakers in order to make their demands heard. The work stoppage started six days ago due to concerns over wage security and Verizon's decision to move jobs out of the U.S. to the Philippines, Mexico and the Dominican Republic.
