

U.S. President Considering Reviving George W. Bush-Era CIA Black Sites

Washington, January 25 (RHC)-- Donald Trump is reportedly considering using executive action to reinstate the secret CIA black sites used during the George W. Bush administration.

The black sites were part of a highly classified program in which suspects captured abroad were interrogated, and sometimes tortured, at secret sites around the world. It was widely condemned by legal and human rights experts, as well as much of the international community.

President Barack Obama ordered all of the black sites to be closed at the beginning of his presidency.
