

El Salvador Presidential Election Goes to Run-off

San Salvador, February 3 (RHC) -- In El Salvador, official results from the country's presidential election show that the candidate from the ruling Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN), Salvador Sanchez Ceren, narrowly missed victory and will face a run-off vote with a conservative rival.

El Salvador's Supreme Electoral Tribunal said Monday with 81 percent of the vote counted, Sanchez Ceren received nearly 49 percent of the vote, just falling short of the more than 50 percent of ballots needed to win outright.

"They gave us a triumph in the first round and we're sure that in the second round the difference will not be 10 points, it will be more than 10 points, it will be a great victory," said Sanchez Ceren.

The former guerrilla commander will face former San Salvador Mayor Norman Quijano, who gathered 39 percent support. According to the electoral tribunal, the second round of voting will take place on March 9th.

Sanchez Ceren, the country's vice president, is seeking to succeed President Mauricio Funes also from the FMLN party.

Tackling gang violence is among the challenges for the new president. Across the country, criminal groups, with an estimated 60,000 members, control entire neighborhoods and run drug trafficking as well as extortion rackets.

The country is also facing a mounting government debt burden and a high poverty rate that stands at more than 40 percent of the population.
