

California Supreme Court ruling deals blow to “gig economy” companies

Sacramento, May 7 (RHC)-- A new ruling by the California Supreme Court will make it significantly more difficult for companies to classify workers as independent contractors -- meaning companies like Uber may have to begin paying overtime, workers' compensation and unemployment insurance.

This week's ruling is being heralded as a victory for workers' rights, and a blow to the so-called gig economy, in which companies avoid an array of labor laws by classifying their workforce as contractors.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/161726-california-supreme-court-ruling-deals-blow-to-gig-economy-companies>

Radio Habana Cuba