

U.S. president to roll back federal anti-discrimination rules

Washington, January 5 (RHC)-- U.S. President Donald Trump is reportedly preparing to alter federal anti-discrimination rules in a far-reaching rollback of civil rights protections. The changes would impact so-called disparate impact regulations meant to fight practices that harm people of color, women, members of the LGBTQ community and other groups.

According to reports, the rollback could impact education, housing and other aspects of American life. In response, Jeff Robinson of the American Civil Liberties Union said: "It is shameful that this administration is considering dismantling tools to fight discrimination rather than using its power to foster respect for the dignity and equality of all people."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/180356-us-president-to-roll-back-federal-anti-discrimination-rules>

Radio Habana Cuba