

Cuba readies for Sunday's referendum on new Constitution

Havana, February 20 (RHC)-- Cuban electoral authorities praised the success of the trial run carried out last Sunday, prior to the February 24th referendum, in which Cubans will either ratify or reject the country's new Constitution, approved in late December by the National Assembly of People's Power. In statements to the press, Alina Balseiro, president of the National Electoral Commission, said the trial run was conducted as planned in the nation's 122 electoral districts, with total transparency and in full compliance with the country's law.

Meanwhile, María Esther Bacallao, a representative of the National Electoral Commission secretariat, said that 2.52% of the more than 25,000 polling stations set up for the upcoming referendum reported some difficulties related to transport, communications and electricity. Bacallao said that all the reported problems must be solved by Thursday, three days before the planned referendum.
